Nicole Farhi's new series of sculptures see her celebrate the sensuality and beauty of the larger female form. The life-size sculptures are made using plaster casts straight onto the body, followed by being re-cast in bronze or jesmonite. Before becoming a full-time sculptor, Farhi ran her eponymous - and very successful - fashion label. She describes this show as her 'antidote to the fashion industry'. One of her models is Sue Tilley, famously painted by Lucian Freud in 'Benefits Supervisor Sleeping'.
