Fancy a day out but short of pennies?

Londoners are lucky enough to have some of the capital's biggest galleries and museums open their permanent collections free of charge – but there are free exhibitions to be enjoyed too, if you know where to look.

From smaller galleries off the beaten track to special displays at some of the capital's more established museums, there's plenty to see without causing distress to your bank balance.

Here's our guide to the best free exhibitions to see in London.

Nicole Farhi: Folds

Ceres, 2018 by Nicole Farhi (Matt Pia)

Fashion designer turned artist Nicole Farhi has her largest exhibition to date currently running at Beaux Arts Gallery. Folds focuses on the beauty of the female body, particularly when folds of flesh form shapes and curves. It includes pieces modelled by Sue Tilley, who previously posed for works by Lucian Freud.
